OPEN-HEARTED PEOPLE.

Travelers in Shetland Are Always Well Treated by the Hospitable Natives.

In the Shetlands one is always welcome to rest by the fire and a cup of bland-fermented buttermilk wheyand, except where the people are exceedingly poor, tea with scones or biscuit is usually offered. Kindly and open-hearted as the people are, the slightest breach of patronage or condescension puts them into a state of proud reserve that is not easily broken. They will confer any number of favors; to accept them is always a little difficult, says the Detroit Free Press.

They live in a most patriarchal manner-three or four generations in one house. The younger men are usually sailors or fishermen; the elder men and the women manage the croft. As plows are unknown, they "dell" the ground with spades before sowing propriations, if her citizens subscribe their little crops of oats and barley. The hay and grain are cut sometimes with a scythe quite often with a small sickle-methods that involve hard labor even on a croft of from two to four acres. The drying hay is protected from the wind by condemned herring nets and is carried to the stack in rope creels. Peats are cut in the spring and dried all summer out on the moors and carried home in kesshies (baskets) of straw or dock slung across the shoulders. The women bring home most of the peats and are commonly to be met with bent under towers several feet high, but often singing and always

COUNTING COINS QUICKLY.

Each revolution carries six or more coins through a registering device which keeps track of the exact number. There is a different-sized head for each coin and the change from nickels to pennies or from dimes to quarters or coins of larger denomination can be made instantly. It is estimated that with one of these machines a strong boy can accurately perform the work of five or six clerks, says a Washington report. A device has also been planned which will count the coins in 100 or 200 lots and by the use of a paper carton they may be done up in packages ready for handling or shipment. By running them consecutively through the various heads a lot of coins may be separated and counted at the same time. The machine is expected to revolutionize coin counting methods.

GERMANS AT THE CIRCUS.

Reduce Receipts by Their Bulk of Body in Taking Up the

One of the bets stories of the Barnum European trip grew out of the German experience. Opinion differs The buttons have had a splendid sale Bourbon News together the year for as to whether the joke is at the expense of the Germans or of the circus itself. On crossing the German frontier, the management discovered a startling shortage in the daily receipts. NOTICE

The women of Central Kentucky have been led to expect much from Kaufman, Straus & Co. in the matter of Tailor-Made Dresses—and rightly.

We have taught our public to look for lavish variety in Fine, Ready-to-Wear Garments. This season, we, ourselves, are astonished at the assemblage presented. Perhaps we have been carried too far by our enthusiasm over the fine things we have found.

In order to introduce these goods sheedily and effectively, we have decided to offer them below their actual value at the very beginning of this season, and thus get our patrons to judge for themselves of the superiority of these fine goods.

The Suits and Dresses we are showing represent the very newest and swellest designs; none of them in the house over fen days, yet they will be reduced to the following prices:

est man in all the commonwealth. knew full well the iron determination Coming from a long line of distin-guished ancestors, every generation of the Lawrences, and it had always been his boast that a "Lawrence has whom had stamped the impress of never been driven, sir-not a single their personality upon the public life step; you can kill them, but you can't of their day, with direct progenitors drive them. No, siree." who had figured as leaders in the Indian wars of the colonists, signers of the articles of confederation, and the declaration of independence, soldiers with Mexico, and distinguished statesmen in the halls of legislation and the counsels of the nation; added to this a splendid record as an officer in the great war of the rebellion--all these things combined to give the old soldier a pride of family and self and a bearing which, while it may have been at times a trifle trying to the more democratic of his neighbors, was admitted by all to be to a great degree both natural and legitimate.

Hardly less proud and exclusive than the old general was his aristocratic wife, for the Lawrences had ever been mindful of their position in contracting matrimonial alliances and the bluest blood in the state had been passed to their children. The position of the Lawrences was freely acknowledged by their neighbors and the community took a kind of reflected pride in them.

Realizing all this the reader will imagine the shock it was to the old general and his good wife when his second son, Will, wrote him from Cuba that he was about to take unto himself as wife a dark-hued daughter of that island. It had been with the greatest satisfaction that the old general had seen Will start away in the uniform of a second lieutenant of volunteers at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. Charles, the eldest son, was in Europe on a combined mission of business and health, both of which would have been seriously imperiled by his immediate return, and for some weeks the general had fumed himself nearly sick at the prospect of an American war in which one of his immediate family was not represented. He had been proud indeed when Will, only a lad of 20, had come to him and announced his determination to go to the front, together with the information that he had been elected a second lieutenant in a regiment organizing for the purpose. To be sure Will was but a boy, but he was a Lawrence and the old patriot had sent him forth with tears of mingled pride and tenderness in his eyes. And Will had rendered a good account of himself; had been advanced to a first lieutenancy for gallantry on the field and accorded a captaincy in the reorganized

This made the blow so much the stronger.

"Shades of Henry Clay," ejaculated the general, pounding the unoffending floor with his gold-headed cane. "A Lawrence to marry a mongrel Latin nigger. Never, never, if I have to go and drag him home by the scruff of the neck. He is crazy. The long service in that accursed fever-plagued nest of infamy has undermined his constitution and sapped the virility of his mind. He is crazy-that's what he is. I'll have him declared insane and put in a mad house-that's what I'll do. Better a thousand times to endure the thought of a son in a lunatic asylum than as the husband of a mongrel black and the father of a lot of woolly headed brats-a Lawrence, too. It is impossible, that's what it is. I shall proceed at once in the matter."

Mrs. Lawrence, while as greatly shocked and alarmed as the general, was not quite so drastic. The vision of her son in a mad house did not appeal to her as a way out of the dilemma, and Eleanor, the daughter of the household, declined utterly to regard the matter as in so hopeless a vein as either parent.

"Maybe she is a Spanish beauty, with all sorts of aristocratic and even noble blood in her veins," she persisted, "and not a negro at all."

Whereat the general narrowly escaped a fit of apoplexy. He had made up his mind and when a Lawrence had made up his mind that was the end of

Finally the mother suggested a plan of action. Charles had returned from abroad. He and Will had always been the closest of comrades and friends and loved each other as few brothers do. He was older by five years, and Will would listen to his riper wisdom and larger experience. He should go forthwith to Cuba on some pretext or other and find means broker has just been received at to break up the proposed marriage. court, says the Chicago Record-Her-It was a delicate mission. Even the ald. You can't keep money down.

So it happened one soft, languorous day that Charles Lawrence disembarked at Havana, presumably upon a mission to secure some transportain the war of the revolution, 1812, and tion franchises for an American syndicate, and hunted up his brother, the captain.

He was received with open arms, and the brothers reveled for several days in their reunion. The elder never hinted at his mission, and when he "talked shop" at all, dwelt enthusiastically upon his franchise quest. If the younger suspected the ulterior design of his visitor he did not betray it.

It was several days after Charles appeared on the scene before he found any sort of opening for the furtherance of his real mission. Singularly enough Will did not mention his love affair or give him any sort of opening, and he hesitated to broach the subject himself. One soft evening, however, after dinner the captain re-

"Charley, I want you to make a call with me this evening. I will show you the two most beautiful women in Cuba-in the world."

Acquiescing readily, the two strolled through the better part of the town and brought up at a rather pretentiously built Cuban home of the older type-somewhat run down, but bearing marks of respectability, even aris-

"This is the home of Don Carlos Antonio Silvera," remarked Will. "He is of a very old and very proud Spanish family-of the purest blood, mind you, and for heaven's sake don't forget that point, as he is extremely proud of it. He was formerly away up in G financially, but the revolution and other misfortunes have largely stripped him of his estates. But he keeps up appearances as best he can and is the finest kind of a type of an old aristocrat. And his two daughters are the very flower of the Antillesespecially Julia." With this preface Charles was ushered into the house and presently was formally presented to the Senorita Julia. He was compelled to admit to himself that his brother certainly had an eye for beauty, for seldom in all his travels had he laid eyes on so striking a girl, so perfect a type of the Latin beauty. Still more was he surprised and taken aback at the high breeding and culture of the fair hostess and her chaperone, the old aunt who guarded her with lynx-eyed fidelity. He was presented also to the master of the house, and was fairly overawed by the dignity and grace of his manner. As he was regarding the senorita with profound admiration and reflecting upon the mammoth proportions his task had suddenly assumed, a curtain was swept aside and a vision appeared before him which drove all other thoughts from his mind and all other objects from his sight. It was another woman very like the Senorita Julia, but very different -more ripened and matured in charm and manner-one of those lustrouseyed, olive-skinned, voluptuously formed creatures only to be found among the women descended from the pure Castillian blood, and also with a face so alive with intelligence and a head so perfectly formed that he almost forgot the perfection of physical beauty in admiration of the suggestion of intellectuality. "Ah, this is the Senorita Rosa," exclaimed the captain. "Senorita, my brother, Charles." The evening sped for both brothers, the younger being engrossed with his fiancee and the elder finding keen interest in the strange, ardent nature of the sister-absolutely a new type to him.

On the way to the captain's lodgings Charles became conscious of a feeling of distinct annoyance in the thought that he was not pursuing his mission with the single-heartedness that he should, and that he had enjoyed the evening altogether too much and did not regard the Silvera family with that aversion which was expected of him. Also he fancied that he detected a note of suppressed glee in the captain's demeanor.

There followed many visits to the Silvera home, and Charles put in many sleepless nights in trying to figure out a plan to break up the affair. but with a growing certainty that he was making a poor job of it and that he cared much more to bask in the sunlight of the Senorita Rosa's lustrous eyes than for expostulating with Will.

Of course the result was foreordained, and that was why old Gen. Lawrence one eventful day received a letter which all but caused the breaking of a blood-vessel and required all the skill of the family doctor to keep him from fading from earth in an apoplectic stroke. It was none other than the announcement that his two sons had been married, respectively, to the Senorita Rosa and the Senorita Julia and begging that he defer judgment until they arrived in America with their wives, when they were sure he would approve of their choice.

And the funniest feature of the entire affair is that he did.

It seemed as if the feathered denizens of the tropical forests had surmised their plans, and had gathered to bid them Godspeed with a noisy chorus. Their brilliant plumage glistened in iridescent hues through the foliage around the bungalow. The chattering banderlogs watched the preparations with curious interest. One very bold monkey ventured so near that Vincent, by a sudden rush, covered him with a large wicker basket. After much maneuvering he succeeded in clamping a chain over his neck and triumphantly led him captive to the deck of "The Jumping Jupiter."

"Here is our mascot!" he exclaimed, as he fastened the chain to the windlass. "He is ugly enough to stand off all the idols."

The monkey made a dash for Vincent's leg, but missed it by an inch. "I DO NOT UNDERSTAND IT," SAID Vincent named him "Socks," on account of his white feet, and "Socks" was duly accepted as a mascot and a they had no difficulty in stopping it.

In the evening the haze lifted and showed the cape still in the northwest. This proved that the tide was pulling against them. The wind died away to a breath, and the sun sank, a huge red ball of fire in a bank of orange clouds. At ten o'clock the wind swung into the southeast and freshened, but the haze yet hung over the sea, and Sidney held his course to the north.

All but Sidney and Mr. Kent retired to the bunks and slept soundly as if on an ocean liner. Save for the bank of fog, it was a perfect night on the water. The raft swayed gently to the deep breathing of the sea, and the masts groaned in musical cadence to the rippling of the water. At midnight Mr Kent took the tiller, and Sidney stretched himself on a steamer chair and enjoyed two hours of untroubled slumber. He awoke and relieved Mr. Kent, who then took

Twice during the night Sidney turned the boat to the west, and held that course until the hollow thunder of the surf warned him to stand out. At about three o'clock the breeze quickened, and a 20-mile breeze sprang up, coming straight from the west. This compelled him to cease any more landward experiments, and "The Jumping Jupiter" rolled along at a five-mile-an-hour

"It is satisfaction to know that we are going somewhere," said Sidney to himself. "We must be past the cape by this time. If the fog lifts with this breeze, daylight will show where we are.'

As he spoke there was a faint glow in the eastern sky. Mr. Kent awoke with a yawn.

"Where are we at?" he asked. Sidney shook his head. "We are headed north," he said.

"He will go by rail and boat, and we will meet him in Havana," said Chalmers. "You had better send word to your captain at once. Tell him I will be on the yacht by seven o'clock. Please warn him to keep the destination a secret. Do not forget to take along lots of wraps; it may be cold on the ocean."

Chalmers returned to his office. and for an hour was busy with instructions to his assistants. He issued orders that The Record should give no hints of pending developments, and selected a special cipher to cover new possibilities. He then proceeded to the pier and boarded the yacht. Miss Carmody and Mrs. Isabel White had arrived, and the latter was in a flutter of excitement. The yacht swung on her keel and headed down the East River and out into the bay. Before twilight had faded, the "Helen Carmody" was well out to sea and making for Havana with a "bone in her teeth."

The "Helen Carmody" was a fine specimen of marine architecture. She was fitted with every convenience and luxury. She was larger than the "Shark," having more staterooms and more powerful engines. While more comfortable and stauncher, she was not so fast as the "Shark." Mr. Carmody had sacrificed speed for room and artistic effect, yet there were few yachts that could show a wake to the "Helen Carmody."

It was late Saturday afternoon when the frowning heights of Morro eastle were seen across the waters, and it was nearly midnight when they dropped anchor in the harbor of Havana. It was decided to remain on the vacht until morning, so the "Helen Carmody" lay within easy distance of the shore.

Sunday morning a yawl put out from the Havana docks. It had as passenger a small man with a "sandy" moustache, and hair which than red. He sat straight and looked dignified. He wore a natty suit of gray, with a large carnation in the lapel of his coat. This was an important event in the life of Mr. Bernard Seymour, but he felt equal to the occasion. There was a subdued twinkle in his blue eyes, which no offset. He critically watched the perspiring Cuban at the oars. Then he looked at the "Helen Carmody." The yawl came alongside the brassrailed gangway.
